FREE KIT · BRANDING

FREE KIT

Brand the promise. The palette is the outfit.

The one-sentence promise that makes every colour and font decision easy, and the one-page brand doc that keeps a business of one consistent.

01 Your one-line brand promise

02 Your voice filter

03 The one-page brand doc

01

The one-sentence brand promise

A brand is a promise, kept so consistently that people expect it. Write yours in one sentence, built from three parts.

Who it's for

NOT
"Everyone"

BUT
One specific person

What changes

NOT
A list of topics

BUT
The transformation you reliably deliver

How it feels

NOT
A mood that shifts every post

BUT
The feeling that comes with it, every time

The test

IF
It needs a paragraph

THEN
It isn't a brand yet. Keep cutting.

The formula: "I help [a specific person] feel [a specific way] as they [a specific transformation]." The sentence comes before the swatch.

02

The voice filter

Voice is the most powerful branding tool a faceless business has. It's how a reader knows it's you before she sees any visual cue at all. Pick a few things you always do and a few you never do, and voice stops being a mood. It becomes a decision you can repeat.

Three words you are

How you sound. For example: warm, direct, a little wry.

Three you're never

The sound you refuse. Now you can spot an off-brand sentence on sight.

Run every sentence through it

Voice isn't a feeling you chase each time. It's a filter.

Consistency over cleverness

The same voice, every time, is worth more than one brilliant line.

Faceless isn't blank: a faceless brand can be warm, funny, opinionated and unmistakably itself. It just carries all of that through voice and consistency instead of a face. Blank is just forgettable.

Your voice is working when:

- [ ] You could remove your logo and people would still know it's yours
- [ ] You've named three words you are, and three you never are
- [ ] You'd recognise an off-brand sentence the moment you saw it

You're not removing the personality. You're moving it into the brand, where it can't be photographed, only recognised.

03

The one-page brand doc

Brands don't drift because of bad taste. They drift because of memory. Six months in, you half-remember the palette and reinvent the voice. Write it down once and stop re-deciding. Fill in the pink parts and keep it where you work.

My promise: I help [a specific person] feel [a specific way] as they [a specific transformation].

Who it's for: [her, specifically, never "everyone"]

Three words I am: [e.g. warm, direct, a little wry]
Three words I'm never: [the three you refuse]

My colours: [a few, named and fixed]
My fonts: [one or two, named and fixed]
My image mood: [one consistent style of imagery]

HOW IT KEEPS YOU CONSISTENT

The promise, in one sentence → who it's for, specifically → three words you are, three you're never → the colours and fonts, named and fixed → and every future choice checks against this page.

Fewer choices, held harder: you don't need beautiful, you need repeatable. A modest palette used with total consistency reads as a brand. A gorgeous one that changes every post reads as noise.