

DFY 30-DAY THREADS CALENDAR

The first week of a Threads calendar, written and ready to post.

Every post below is finished copy, in the client's voice, on the client's slot plan. She opens the calendar, copies the day, and posts. No blank box at 7:30 in the morning.

THE DAILY SLOT PLAN

Three posts a day. One of them sells.

Margo's 30 days run on the same three slots, so the account feels alive all day without her thinking about it. The offer always has its link in a reply, never in the post.

Day 1 MONDAY

PL pennywhistle.ledger

7:30 AM · HOT TAKE

Hot take: your Etsy shop isn't slow. Your books are just vague.

Deposits are not profit. Fees, labels, listing renewals and that ad you forgot about all come out first.

Know your real margin before you decide the shop "isn't working."

Day 2 TUESDAY

Unpopular opinion: "I'll catch up on my books in January" is a plan to have a very bad January.

95/500 characters

PL pennywhistle.ledger

12:00 PM · TEACH

How to sort a year of receipts without crying:

- One folder per month, not per category
- Photograph paper receipts the day you get them
- Name files date first: 2026-10-06 fabric
- Categories come last, once everything is in one place

Sort first, label second. Always.

Day 3 WEDNESDAY

PL pennywhistle.ledger

7:30 AM · HOT TAKE

Nobody talks about this: the sale you're proudest of might be the one costing you the most.

Custom orders eat hours you never write down.

138/500 characters

PL pennywhistle.ledger

12:00 PM · TEACH

Quick math for custom orders:

Time one. Actually time it, start to finish, including the messages back and forth.

Multiply by what you'd pay someone else to do it.

If the price doesn't cover that plus materials, it's not a custom order. It's a favour.

Day 4 THURSDAY

Separate your business money this week. In this order:

1. Open a checking account just for the shop
2. Point your shop payouts to it
3. Move every business subscription over, one a day
4. Pay yourself on the same date each month

Mixed accounts are the first thing I untangle for new clients.

Friday five-minute money check:

- ☐ Download this week's shop statement
- ☐ Drop new receipts in this month's folder
- ☐ Look at one subscription you forgot you pay for
- ☐ Write down your order count

Five minutes on Friday saves a whole weekend in April.

Day 6 SATURDAY

Saturday confession: I love a messy spreadsheet. I just don't let it anywhere near a tax deadline.

What usually counts as a business expense for handmade sellers (check with your tax pro for your own situation):

- Materials and packaging
- Shop and listing fees
- Shipping labels
- Software you use for the shop
- A share of your phone bill

Keep the receipt. Every time.

Day 7 SUNDAY

My Sunday 20:

5 min: last week's order count and total
5 min: receipts into folders

Paper is fine. The habit matters more than the tool.

THE HOOK BANK

20 openers for off-plan days.

When something happens in her week, Margo grabs a hook and writes the rest in her own words. Every hook is in her voice and none repeat a post in the calendar.

01 Deposits are not profit.

02 The shoebox is not a system.

03 Your best seller might be your worst earner.

04 I opened a client's books and found the same subscription three times.

05 Stop categorising receipts before you've sorted them.

06 If you can't name your margin, you can't set your price.

07 Tax season starts in October, not April.

08 Custom orders are where profit goes to hide.

09 You don't need an app. You need a Friday.

10 Pay yourself on purpose, not by accident.

11 The five-minute habit that saves a whole weekend.

12 Your shop fees went up. Did your prices?

13 I'm a bookkeeper and I still hate receipts.

14 The first question I ask every new client.

15 Free shipping isn't free. Someone pays it.

16 What I'd fix first if I opened your books today.

17 Three numbers. That's the whole dashboard.

18 The mistake that makes tax prep take twice as long.

19 Mixing accounts feels fine until it doesn't.

20 Your future self is going to read these books.

WHAT YOU JUST LOOKED AT
