

DFY 6-EMAIL SALES SERIES

Six objections. Six emails. Here are two, in full.

Each email answers the one reason a subscriber hasn't bought yet, in the client's voice, with one ask linked twice. Written and scheduled in her MailerLite, with buyers excluded so nobody gets sold what they already own.

BUILT FOR

Paperlark Planner Studio

Priya Holloway sells Notion planners and one course, The Sunday Reset Notion Course. Her list is warm but hesitant: people love her free templates and stall at the course. Voice: friendly, direct, a bit of sparkle.

★ Sample built for a fictional client.

ONE ASK, LINKED TWICE

Every email asks for one thing: the course. The link sits on words early in the email and again on the closing button.

NO GUARANTEES, NO INCOME CLAIMS

Nothing promises a result or a timeline. The no-refunds email states the policy plainly and shows what's inside instead.

BUYERS EXCLUDED

The whole series goes to active subscribers except the group Sunday Reset Buyers, checked again at send time.

READ BACK AFTER SCHEDULING

Each campaign is opened on its review page after it's scheduled: subject, date, audience, both links.

Paperlark Planner Studio

Hi there,

Can I tell you the thing I hear most about Notion?

"It looks amazing. I'd never be able to set it up."

I get it. The first time I opened Notion I stared at a blank page for twenty minutes and closed the tab.

Here's what nobody says out loud: you don't need to understand Notion to use a good Notion planner. You need someone to hand you the finished one and show you the few buttons you'll actually press.

That's exactly what The Sunday Reset Notion Course is.

You copy my planner into your account in one click. Then short videos walk you through filling in your own week, one page at a time. No building from scratch. No formulas. If you can write a to-do list, you can do this.

The tech is the part I already did for you.

EMAIL 1 · CAN'T DO THE TECH

Why it's built this way

OPENS WITH HER OWN WORDS

The first line quotes the objection the way subscribers actually say it.

TAKES THE FEAR OFF THE TABLE

Admits the blank-page moment, then moves the tech to Priya's side: it's already built.

SENDS

Tuesday, 11:00 AM, to subscribers who haven't bought.

Paperlark Planner Studio

Hi there,

Straight talk today, because you deserve it.

The Sunday Reset Notion Course is a digital course. The second you buy, you get the whole thing: every video, the planner, all of it. So there are no refunds.

Which means I'd much rather you know exactly what's inside before you decide. Here it is:

- The Sunday Reset planner, copied into your Notion in one click
- Six short video lessons, each under ten minutes
- A weekly review page that takes about twenty minutes
- A meal and habit tracker that lives inside the same planner

Every lesson is listed on the course page, so you can see it all before you pay.

And here's who it isn't for, honestly:

- If you love building systems from scratch, you'll find it too done-for-you.
- If you don't open a laptop or tablet during the week, a paper planner will suit you better. Truly.

If you read that list and thought "that's me, that's exactly what I need", then you already know.

EMAIL 4 · NO REFUNDS

Why it's built this way

SAYS THE POLICY FIRST

No refunds, stated plainly in the third line. No guarantee, no trial, no fine print.

REPLACES THE REFUND WITH CLARITY

Lists exactly what's inside so the reader can judge before she pays.

TELLS THE WRONG BUYER TO SKIP IT

Naming who it isn't for is what makes the right buyer trust the rest.
